

Juliet, Magazine of Contemporary Art since 1980, Trieste, Italy

Thursday, May 23, 2019

PERSONAL STRUCTURES - Identities

The European Cultural Institute presents the fifth edition of the PERSONAL STRUCTURES - Identities format, an exhibition where contemporary art forms such as architecture, design, and visual arts converge, like the 58th Biennale Arte in Venice, establishing a happy dialogue between established and emerging figures. A complex and cosmopolitan panorama is the one presented by the exhibition, which asks artists to rethink the relationship between space, time and existence in that trait that the ego underwrites in relation to the Other. It follows a well-articulated reflection on how to think about our identity in increasingly multicultural, transnational, digital, and global contexts. Introduced by a rich program of performative and sound events to underline a heartfelt and lively presence in the lagoon, PERSONAL STRUCTURES - Identities focuses on current issues and asks to rethink art, ethics, aesthetics, politics, and their possible narratives, through positions that are never extreme, but clear in the lines of thought.

At Palazzo Bembo, the British artist Lincoln Townley presents the Behind The Mask series of paintings, which portray 'the human machine', as the artist tells us, or a series of figures immersed in a dynamic, feverish, engulfing landscape from which one they stand out with their dazzling profiles to suggest a gesture, an expression and an action that are always framed in a collective dimension. What is perceived in Townley's paintings is not a harmonious dance, but a network of forces and dynamisms that does not have a before or an after, but is rendered in the unique instant of events and their relationships in their being. He talks well with the intellectual dimension of UNCONSCIOUS by Georges Kachaamy, representative of the American University in Dubai, which presents a compilation, not yet exhausted, of 100 drawings that become frames of a micro-macro cosmos, or of a vision that in the emergence as an automatism of the individual, returns a collective imagination. From the same line of thought, it seems to be the Swiss artist Francois Bonjour with the installation Perturbation in which, as a collector of fragments, as he likes to define himself, he rethinks the history, intimate and collective by the darkest caverns of texts and writing, recalling 'a rhythmic narrative in the secret intelligence of things'. The exhibition opens up to the landscape and again, the visions we perceive are not dreamy, but real in their alienating strength as for the paintings Vast Scale-Intimate Space American artist Cheryl Goldsleger who introduces us to a perspective, let's say, satellite, of our planet with its relative and gravitational motions. Not otherwise, the Azimut project by the German artist Goitlind Timmermanns stages a constellation that in rethinking the abstract atmospheres of painting, never loses sight of the vitalist sense of matter.

At Palazzo Mora, the accent of PERSONAL STRUCTURES - Identities becomes more personal, as in the series of self-portraits by the German artist Petra Barth, My Original Face, which recall the passing of time in expressions and minimal gestures, talking about how research of the self and then, a search for freedom. Always an intimate dimension is that of the Israeli-Dutch artist Bianca Severjins who, as in the title of the work on show, seems to ask us Who will protect us? Who will behold us? An optimistic view seems to emerge from the beauty of the Skin works of the Israeli artist Ariela Wertheimer, which rethinks the regenerative force of matter in its micro-macro cosmos.

The political scenes of the British artist Marcus Bleasdale conceived for the Human Rights Watch photographic project, touch on urgent themes and urge a position statement. They dialogue well with the conceptual and gestural dimensions of the Macedonian artist Maria Pavlovska, who in the double video-installation A Reaction, aims at the most intimate aspects of being to return a pure gesture. The invitation to the action finds a precedent and a context in the Actionism & More section, which repropose the works of the artists Sarah Gold, Hermann Nitsch, Arnful Reiner, Valie Export, rethinking identity through the body and the limits between inside and outside.

At the end of the exhibition, The Silent Road by the American artist Marietta Patricia Leis, seems to invite us to weave a common thought made of meditation and translucency, presenting a long papyrus of graphite signs that seems to have no end. We can think of an analogy with the American artist Walter Markham's installation Flaying of Marsyas - Homage to Tiziano Vecellio - Titian, which overturns the pictorial plane in a horizontal plane, rethinking the brilliant red of Titian in his absence and in his more abstract dimension.

Info:

PERSONAL STRUCTURES - Identities

European Cultural Center

11 May - 24 November 2019

Palazzo Bembo, Palazzo Mora, Giardini della Marinaressa, Venice

ORGANIZERS: Valeria Romagnini, Lucia Pedrana, Sara Danieli, Claudia Piovan, Bérénice Freytag, Bianca Bonaldi, Rocco Schenkel, Elena Volpato, Cristina Sakura Indragoli, Debora Bae, Micaela Skerl, Mila Sarkisyan, Svetlana Eroshina

WEBSITES: <https://ecc-italy.eu/> <https://europeanculturalcentre.eu/>

Sara Buoso

She is interested in the visual, verbal and textual aspects of the Modern Contemporary Arts. From historical-artistic studies at the Cà Foscari University, Venice, she specialized in teaching and curatorial practice, at IED, Rome, and Christie's London. The scope of his research activity focuses on the theme of Light from the 1950s to emerging events, ontologically considering artistic, phenomenological and visual innovation aspects.